Property Description

Coldwell Banker Pacific Realty is working in partnership with Desarrollos Hojancha (Hojancha Developments) to offer cabins and homes of outstanding quality and beauty to its clients. Desarrollos Hojancha is a German-Costa Rican integrated forestry, milling, development and construction company located in Hojancha. The company's business model is based on using locally grown woods – principally teak and gmelina – to build these homes on land that the company has bought, divided, and offers to its customers, who are principally Swiss, Germans and Austrians. In addition to lots and homes, the company offers opportunities to invest in this process. The cabins are built principally of teak, with cabinets, closets and other non-structural elements made primarily of gmelina and teak. Native hardwoods such as guanacaste, pochote and cenizaro are used as highlights or for countertops and other surfaces.
